

Denise Pellow announces the release of her new book:
*The Five Dangerous Trends Concerning
Kids, Technology and the Internet.

A new book hoping to shed light on a very serious subject is available at www.attentionparents.com, Amazon and local bookstores. Denise Pellow's The Five Dangerous Trends Concerning Kids, Technology and the Internet is a parent's guide to the inner circle of your children. Parents watch everyday as their children click away on their cell phones and computers. Do you know what they are saying? Do you know who they are talking to? Do you know who is watching them?

"The information that you presented was very eye-opening and helpful in this techie world we live in. I think parents and grandparents alike should get their hand on your book!" said Colleen Iten, grandparent.

As parents work longer and harder to give their children the very best in life, our society finds itself more connected through texting devices, computers, and video cams. Many parents worry about who is talking to their children, but oftentimes they leave the situation to chance in hopes all is innocent. Pellow's book, while not a scare tactic, is a sensible approach to how to talk to your child about the dangers of the technological age and when it is the proper time to approach the subject.

"Parents are busier than ever. There are days we barely have time to get dinner on the table, let alone ask them about who they communicated with that day," said Pellow.

Pellow has the busy parents and the single parent in mind with The Five Dangerous Trends Concerning Kids, Technology and the Internet. She is a parent and grandparent, as well as a consultant, author, and speaker specializing in kids, technology, and the Internet. She combines 25 years in the legal field and certification in computer network engineering. In short, she knows what goes on behind the scene.

Pellow understands the importance of the technological age. The Five Dangerous Trends Concerning Kids, Technology and the Internet is not an assault on the trends of today, nor is it a guilt trip for parents. It is decisive, direct, and informative – a book for the modern times about today's technologically advanced children.

Pellow delivers presentations to keep families, schools, communities and civic organizations up to date with the continual changes in current technology. She brings cutting-edge information on technological trends affecting our kids. She has been instrumental in facilitating new laws to protect kids from cyberstalking and cyberharassment.

“Parents and teachers have been discussing ‘stranger danger’ with children for years. Denise helps you take that conversation a step further,” said Nancy Schneider, Ed.D, Lindenwood University, Saint Charles, MO.

To book an interview with the author or for more information about The Five Dangerous Trends Concerning Kids, Technology and the Internet, contact Denise Pellow, KidsBeSafeOnline LLC at 314.517.3170 or denise.pellow@gmail.com.

###